

02

03

- 01 Entrance to the Ploughman's Lunch Bakery
- 02 Lunchtime at the bakery
- 03 Diners at the bakery
- 04 The bakery's garden
- 05 Customer seating
- 06 Open for business
- 07 Ryoma Yabu (right) and bakery staff

04

05

06

07

Resident 06
Ryoma Yabu

Ryoma was all set to study architecture in Europe but came to see his parents (his father comes from Okinawa) and never left. He set up the popular Ploughman's Lunch Bakery in a house that is nearly 50 years old.

"I was looking for something unique – a warehouse or an old factory – when I came across this place," he says, adding that perceptions of military houses have changed. "People know they can sell or rent these places for a decent price. Some people like the American scale: the windows are bigger and the ceilings are higher."