

"None of us are really able to acknowledge that 'the good old days' are happening right now. We get so caught up in what's next. But, sooner than we think, we'll be looking back at this time and wishing we had it back."

Each summer, the family shares Camp Wandawega with non-profit organizations who put on camps for kids, young artists, musicians, and local church groups, endeavors that Tereasa Surratt calls "the most emotionally fulfilling money-losers ever."
