

Perched on a canyon-side lot above Beverly Hills, the structure is organized as a series of dramatic, nature-filled experiences. Visitors enter through a narrow concrete hall, which opens to a tropical garden with a concrete-and-glass walkway bridging a koi pond.

Lautner, working with current owner James Goldstein, installed redwood plank ceilings, frameless panes of glass, leather and concrete furniture, jungle-like landscaping, and a stone-bridged koi pond.

