

Left: The flexible structures are envisaged to be constructed from cross-laminated timber, an environmentally conscious alternative to concrete and steel.

Top right: The concept combines private living with shared spaces that enable people to be part of a vibrant community.

Bottom right: The standardized modular building system would be pre-fabricated, mass-produced and flat-packed—all of which would help drive down construction costs.

