

climb up to the Panascharte to take in the view looking back down the cliff face, and then finish the walk at the Seceda viewpoint for that final view—a fitting end to an almost complete circum-navigation of the western Geisler Group. Take the Seceda cable car back down to Ortisei.

“Its most celebrated corner is the Geisler Group, a western outpost of the range that forms one of the classic skylines of the Dolomites.”

- ← Sass Rigais and Furchetta, the two peaks of the Seceda Ridge, reflected in a pond near Geisleralm.
- ↓ Below the ridge is a landscape of meadows and shattered rock.

- ↑ A fall dawn from the Seceda viewpoint.
- ← Hiking from the Seceda viewpoint toward the improbable towers ahead.