

“We come from a tropical and naturalistic landscaping line concerned with positively interfering with the environment.

We want to create a landscape inspired by the natural formations and socio-environmental heritage of each biome.”

Opposite: The design duo is concerned with creating a naturalistic environment, incorporating the outdoors to the living space.

Above: Their landscape design practice focuses on creating green space sanctuaries throughout the sprawling megacity.

“We come from a tropical and naturalistic landscaping line concerned with positively interfering with the environment,” Ornaghi says of her design philosophy. She wants to create “a landscape inspired by the natural formations and socio-environmental heritage of each biome. We are always looking for new inspirations and new vegetation to create innovative designs rich in texture and beauty. As our academic background is architecture, we are also concerned with relating architecture to the environment in which it is inserted, softening the boundary between internal and external, and increasing the integration between these spaces.”