

Haworthia cooperi. Pair these sun-loving plants with smooth river-stone pathways or driftwood accents for a complete look.

Recumbent Snacking Garden

Perhaps you too have memories of stealthily stealing fresh sugar snap peas off their curling tendrils and vines as a child. As an adult, plan your garden for snap pea flowers, or save your violets to candy and serve with strawberries and freshly whipped cream.

Tisane Garden

Most tea comes from a single plant: Camellia sinensis. Japanese and Chinese green teas, English Breakfast, and Earl Grey all start out as the same plant; the leaves are just Complementary colors like purples and yellows, reds and greens, or oranges and blues can make a garden design vibrate.

the pleasure of snacking. Strategically place edible plants like peas, strawberries, blueberries, or other snacking favorites by seating areas or grassy patches, and imagine yourself in full recline, reading a book and picking a sun-ripe strawberry to munch. It's a snack-tivity.

Edible Flower Garden

Turn summer salads, pizzas, or vegetables into a garden feast with edible flowers. Add a pop of color from nasturtiums or sugar picked and processed differently. In lieu of the dry stuff, grow your own plants to make a tisane: a steeped hot drink made from fresh leaves, bark, and berries. Plants like lemon verbena, lemon balm, fresh chamomile, and peppermint all produce fragrant and light brews—and they taste even better when combined together.

Pollinator Garden

If the sound of a busy garden is like music to your ears, consider a pollinator garden.

“Think of a color garden like a coloring book: fill in the landscape.”