

Arlo and his father have also come to Long Island from Jersey City, but they are here to enjoy the county fair. After getting off the subway, they take a passenger train that travels on the Long Island Rail Road, which shares some of its tracks with the New York & Atlantic Railway.

At the fairground there are lots of things that have arrived here by the same route...

The french fries and onion rings traveled along the same tracks.

And the meat used for the hamburgers.

The hot dogs and ice cream that Arlo and his father enjoy were brought here by the New York & Atlantic Railway.

The fuel used to cook the food is carried on the railway, too.

So was the gravel beneath their feet.

And even the recycled cardboard packaging!
