

Off to the Rainforest!

Emma and Louis find it hard to decide where to look first! They're surrounded by the most amazing animals! Venomous frogs with bright yellow and blue skin croak, jaguars nap up in the branches of the trees, and ants, beetles and locusts swarm all around them. Butterflies flutter here, and monkeys are swing there from tree to tree on the vines.

The tropical rainforest is like a green universe of its own. Lots of different animals live here, along with countless types of plants like ferns, orchids, banana plants, and gigantic trees.

Anyone who wants to go on a nature study tour must first get used to the very moist air. This makes it quite hard to breathe. It's also warm—to say the least! And of course it rains a lot. That's obvious from the name “rainforest”. Emma and Louis soon accustom themselves to the climate, and they just love exploring the rainforests. The biggest of all are in Africa (the Congo Basin), South America (the Amazon), and Southeast Asia. And they're starting off in Africa.

Come with us on a journey of discovery!
